we shall try to be brief.

We said in our article of yesterday, that, if it was the Bishop's object to make a fair comparison of the influences of Roman Catholicism with those of Protestantism, he should have selected some other country than France, inamuch as France is far more insided than Catholic. The French or the Gallican church has never acknowledged the power and authority of the Pope. That church is not recognized as orthodox by the Roman Catholic world. It is not rendorsed by the Hierarchy, and secreely of adults. Mr. Bonner acknowledges that he not endown by the Roman Catholic world. It is not endown by the Hierarchy, and scarcely of adults. Mr. Bonner acknowledges that he even endured. And yet Bishop Spalding, in casting around for an illustration of Reman Catholic influence, selects France. He speaks of the power and the glory of France as the effect of the Catholic religion, and yet he knows that the power and glory of France, whatever that the power and glory of France, whatever they may be, are chiefly due to the mighty genius and wonderful energy of Napoleon Bonaparte, who, far from having any especial reverence for the Pope, took the Holy Fatber by the beard and shook him till his old head was nearly shaken from his shoulders.

The Market are Mr. Bonnel's powers of compression, but, though he commences with a compression, but, though he commences with a merica prior to its discovery by Columbus, and seizes every prominent event in its history, from the time that Runic characters were engraved upon northern rocks, down to the deaths of Calhoun, Clay, and Webster, the author improved the commences with the compression, but, though he commences with a compression with a compression with the compression with the compression with the compression with a

It seemed to us that the learned Bishop was singularly unskillful in his plan of treating the beeu a record of dry details of names and dates. subject as well as in some other things. His leading and specific object, as we have said, desires of its author, in "helping children, byleading and specific object, as we have said, was to show, by a comparison of Protestant and-by, to read with interest larger and better England and Roman Catholic France, that Roman Catholic ism makes a people greater and better and more prosperous and more powerful than Protestantism does. Nevertheless, in apeaking of those matters in which he considered England ruferier to France, he repeatedly delayed that in his complex, the result was able to the considered England ruferier to France, he repeatedly the voluminum stores of Ragrenti. declared that, in his opinion, the result was chiefby ascribable to the system of primogeniture in England, the system by which a landed estate goes exclusively to the eldest son. We disapprove of that system as strongly as the Bishop does, but we should like to know what connection the supposes it has with either Popery or Proteststreet. Surely, he wouldn't endeated the surely anything in it that demands correction. There is one error, however, that should be corrected that the supposes it has with either Popery or Protesttions. he supposes it has with either Popery or Protestants. Surely he wouldn't undertake to say to any intelligent man that he regards the ling-lish law of primogeniture, whether had or good, as an offspring of Protestantism. Such a system prevails in no Protestant country on earth, except England; and, as the Bisbop himself said of the writ of habeas corpus and the trial hy jury, it was established in England centures before the Protestant Reformation—established when England was under Catholic domination. when England was under Catholic domination.

Now is it not most extraordinary that an able and learned dignitary of the Catholic Church, in his very effort to show that the comparative conditions of England and France prove the superior influences of Roman Catholicism, should be writer. He says: "I have tried to recount how a few straggling bands of poor was degrees, seeking a scanty living bands of poor was degrees, seeking a scanty living on the wild see insist that whatever is disadvantageous to England in the comparison is chiefly ascribable to the law of primogeniture, a law which bears no greatest pations of the earth.
